ALMENS' Work

Subject discussed his proposals with ALMENS, who told him what his own office did and what the Partisan situation was like. ALMENS said that his office dealt with destroying the unity of the Partisans by means of propaganda, seemingly anti-German and anti-Fascist but which spread discord and confusion amongst the various bands. This was done by spreading rumours tending to divide the Partisans amongst themselves and by publishing leaflets, ostensibly from one group of Partisans, whereby that group took the blame for the actions of others or attempted to sow dissension between the various bands. He said he was not sure if this was done for the German or Italian benefit, but he was sure it was done to destroy the unity of the Partisans and to make it easier for the German to deal with them.
